ISSUE 22 – 25 OCTOBER 2011

FROM THE HEADMASTER

The World Cup is over, and the outcome a great one for New Zealand. Today, a parade of celebration passes our front gate, and will bring to an end a memorable experience. The tournament has, of course, been the reason for the very short term we now face – just six weeks to the end of the year. I am starting to put together Prize Giving speeches for just a few weeks' time. The year has served up plenty of material, but I don't at this stage anticipate too much reflection on the quakes. Whilst just a few weeks hence, I am confident there will be much to share about the future, particularly our new developments.

I have been in the US this holiday, and whilst I was away an important decision was taken by the Board, to demolish the Chapman Block. It will make way for the full development of the 'West End' of College, including the former maths, English and Chapman buildings. Now that Chapman's fate is sealed, we should acknowledge its past; in 1961 it was a spectacularly audacious development, putting such uncompromising modernity immediately behind the most historic stone educational building in the country (now the Library) and closing a precinct of mellow and decorative Victorian styles. It was, unsurprisingly, saluted in its day and has continued to be regarded as a significant building by architectural students. As we look at it now, the question is how do some modern buildings retain their appeal to later generations, and some do not? Modern architecture should challenge and excite, but does that mean it is condemned to quickly date and fall victim to changing tastes? Our new building will certainly be contemporary – the challenge is to ensure, if possible, that in 50 years' time it continues to be admired and enjoyed.

Whilst in New York, I took myself off to look at the 'Cloisters', an annexe to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, on the Upper West Side of Manhattan. The building appears to be an Italianesque monastery, but in fact was built specifically to incorporate architectural features from many European religious buildings. The 'Cloisters' themselves use masonry from several monastic sites. There is a complete apse incorporated in the 1950s from the church of San Martin at Fuentiduena in Spain, innumerable doorways and windows, floors, and even a complete monastic chapter house, rescued from Notre-Dame-de-Pontaut, south of Bordeaux where it was being used as a cattle barn. The reuse of architectural salvage in this place was inspiring. In the case of the Cloisters, an appropriate period ambience was carefully created, but the prospect of some deliberate introduction of architectural artifacts from our demolished buildings around the campus does appeal.

It would add interest to our tour groups, whose season is about to start. I met with our guides, senior Old Boys who serve us so well in the summer, at the end of last term. The cruise ship schedule is about to begin (berthing also in Akaroa) and we have been asked to take a much larger number of visitors; whilst the quadrangle does not look much like it 'usually' does, the architectural story of College surviving the quakes is one which many will find interesting, against the somewhat depressing backdrop of the city's experience.

The Pink Lunch

This short term brings the senior examinations upon us almost at once. However, this was signaled far in advance and I was pleased to hear of a good level of focus amongst senior students during the long Term 3. Educationally, this arrangement has something to commend it – ‘revision’ shortly before examinations is for many, and has ever been, sometimes the first real attempt to internalise important material; the same procrastination brings the belief that the holiday and last few weeks will, miraculously, provide the full opportunity required, and of course it seldom does. So to have a much reduced ‘final’ period may well have served to focus efforts a little earlier. The examination period presents different scales of commitment, depending on subject choice and level; for some, the course is all but over and qualification is certain; for others competitive entry to some courses depends of what lies ahead. There are a number of boys who have ‘passed’ their respective level already, and are not motivated to strive further in the external examinations. But therein lies the test of personal commitment and challenge. To do everything to the best of one’s ability, whether it appears to have immediate value or not, is a life habit – and those who have that self motivation and drive stand out. Boys should approach their lives on a ‘count back’ philosophy – that is, if they find themselves being compared with another person in a situation where all else appears to be equal, will they miss out on a ‘count back’ comparison? In some earlier performance, did they let an opportunity go by? Did they fail to score the bonus point? There was much discussion during the World Cup, of how France found themselves in the final with a relatively unimpressive track record. But they did enough, and others fortuitously did not. The boys can not be sure those with whom they compete will also ‘not do enough’. They need to hit every challenge positively, whether they think it ‘matters’ or not. They are not, at this stage, able to see ahead well enough to know when looking back might be important!

As a postscript, do you ever wonder whether your teenage children listen to you? Take heart. It is obvious not all messages get through at a first attempt. I saw this construction gate at the World Trade Centre – it was oddly reassuring.

Simon Leese, Headmaster

Canterbury Earthquake Scholarship

On Wednesday 5 October the Minister of Education announced the introduction of a Canterbury Earthquake Scholarship. This one-off scholarship will provide financial assistance to 2011 Year 13 Canterbury students whose final year of study or plans for tertiary study have been affected by the earthquakes. There are up to 166 scholarships available, each worth $2,000 per year for up to three years of tertiary study. The scholarships will support two groups of Canterbury students. The first group are students who are experiencing significant personal hardship as a result of the earthquakes, and may have changed their plans for tertiary study. The second, smaller group of students will become eligible should annual results for NCEA academic scholarships be lower than in recent years for Canterbury.

We have received information about the Canterbury Earthquake Scholarship for students experiencing personal hardship. This involves timelines, criteria, the application process and role of the school; together with information sheets and application forms for students who might want to apply.

Students are asked to apply through their schools and boys can collect relevant information from Mr Sellars. Schools will be asked to signal the level of personal hardship each student has experienced. November 7 - students return completed application form to Mr Sellars

University Halls/Colleges Applications

Universities will have by now posted out their offers of a position in a hall. I am aware that Otago and Victoria universities have been over subscribed. There is no need to panic if some boys have not been offered a position. There will be withdrawals as some students have applied for more than one university. I would recommend that they accept any hall they are offered even if it was not one of their preferred options.

UC - University of Canterbury Scholarships

UC has increased the funding of scholarships by a third. A significant component will be available to first-year students based on their Level 2 & 3 endorsements.

NCEA Level 2		NCEA Level 3
Endorsement	+	Endorsement	= Cash Scholarship
Excellence	+	Excellence	= $3000
Excellence	+	Merit/Achieved	= $2000

Tom Mouldey

Lincoln University 2nd year undergraduate:

After finishing school at Christ's College, Tom Mouldey headed straight to Lincoln University and is now studying for his Bachelor in Commerce (Property Valuation and Management). "I have always had an interest in property and the property market, and receiving a hockey sports scholarship allowed me to attend Lincoln University to study in an area I am passionate about," he says.

Tom is in his second year of his degree and is enjoying the practical side of the course. As part of the degree component, students gain hands-on experience by visiting different sections of land, properties, sub-divisions etc and writing reports on the characteristics of each. Due to the support from the University staff and lecturers, Tom is managing to juggle studying and training. "In my case with being here on a hockey sports scholarship I tend to spend a bit more time away from the University. However, the lecturers understand and are able to provide alternative learning solutions so I do not get behind. Time management plays a major role as you start to progress further into your degree. You need to be up to date with your study, which allows you to be fully focused at training sessions".

Tom enjoys the university's mix of modern and traditional facilities and he is particularly impressed with the wide variety of high-quality gym equipment. The Recreation Centre allocates space specifically for sports scholarship participants to allow students to work with their trainer and respective sporting code.

When Tom finishes his degree his priority is to gain property valuation experience. "There are so many areas in property that you can get into, such as management and development. Banks are employing graduates to monitor their loans against properties so there are plenty of opportunities available," he says.

His other priority is continuing to develop as a hockey player with the aim of being named in the Canterbury Cavaliers team for 2012 and in the future chosen to represent the New Zealand Black Sticks.

THE TANCRED PRIZES

Towards the end of last term some of you sat extra examinations for the Tancred Prize for Literature, while others have prepared an essay for the Tancred Prize for History over the holidays.

Who was Tancred and why are there prizes in his name for History and Literature?

Henry John Tancred was baptized on 14 May 1816 at the Isle of Wight and was educated at Rugby School. He spent some time in the army, and then became interested in the Canterbury Association. He emigrated on the Barbara Gordon and was in Lyttelton before the arrival of the first four ships. In 1852 he became chairman of the Canterbury Colonists' Society and this was the beginning of a long career in public office. He was on the Canterbury Provincial Council and its Executive, a Member of the House of Representatives, a director of a number of public companies, a resident magistrate in both Lyttelton and Christchurch, a keeper of the public records, sherriff and commissioner of police, and president of the Canterbury Society of Arts. From 1856-1866 he was a Member of the Legislative Chamber.

He and his older brother, Thomas, the seventh baronet, purchased Malvern Hills Station in 1852, and sold a part share to the Bishop of Christchurch, Henry John Chitty Harper in 1858. They brought Ashburton Station in 1853.

Tancred's main interests were education. He helped set up the Canterbury Board of Education, and Christchurch Boys' High School, was involved in the Canterbury Collegiate Union which led to the foundation of Canterbury College, the forerunner of Canterbury University. He was later

Chancellor of the University of New Zealand. He was also on the St John's Theological College Trust Board in Auckland.

Most importantly for Christ's College he was Fellow from 1856-1884 and Bursar from 1863-1864, as well as one of its early examiners in History. While on the Board he was appointed Hulsean-Chichelean Professor of Modern History. This professorship was named after Sir Edward Hulse, a Fellow of All Souls College Oxford and the College's founder Henry Chichele (Archbishop of Canterbury 1414-1443). It was one of two professorships that were associated with the Upper Department of Christ's College and one of the conditions associated with the professorship was to deliver a course of lectures, but these never eventuated.

On 30 July 1857 in Nelson he married Georgeanna (Georgy) Janet Grace Richmond the daughter of Hon. Major Matthew Richmond, Member of the Legislative Chamber. They had no children and it was Georgeanna, who in 1884 following his death endowed the Tancred prizes for Literature and History in Henry John Tancred's memory.
